

Erratum

Just before Christmas, I read a new book entitled, Carols from King's, written by Alexandra Coghlan; a delightful history of the college chapel, the evolution of carols, and the stories behind some of those better known. However, the page of printed music for Adam Lay Ybounden purporting to be by Boris Ord, was in fact that by Peter Warlock. So in thanking her for a wonderfully insightful read, I pointed out the error, assuming many others would have done the same. In her response, she informed me, that I was the first to have brought it to her attention.

I only mention this, because, in my last piece, 'Suffer the little children to come unto me', (Advent and Christmas 2016) I referred to the missing small boy, of 'feeding of the five thousand' fame, giving references from Mathew, Mark and Luke's gospels. I grievously omitted John 6:9, 'There is a boy here who has five barley loaves and two fish.' My apologies to those who may have spotted it, and to the three who took the trouble to tell me!

It just goes to show that, a. we are all prone to making mistakes, and b, people are actually reading Witney Way! So thank you, we like to receive your feedback.

Howard Brayton
co-editor